Mores can't be regulated

I REMEMBER WHEN all of Europe was laughing about the "Monkey Trial in Tennessee" (also referred to as the Scopes Trial.) It seems that some people have not learned that thoughts and mores cannot be regulated by police or court action.

The recent arrest and prosecution of some women for baring their breasts reminds us of this silly attempt to teach "morality."

In many places in Europe, be it in the Scandinavian countries or in Central Europe, or even as far south as the French Riviera, you can find women enjoying the surf and the sun without their tops covered, and nobody sees anything wrong or immoral in it. (Just as we see nothing wrong when our women do not cover their face, as it is required in some of the Moslem countries).
